

Zoobs

Jennifer Hammons, Site Supervisor

So we recently bought these things called Zoobs, in an attempt to reduce the chaotic mobs that consistently storm the Lego table. If you've never heard of a Zoob, they are small plastic pieces with either a ball or a scoop on each end that link together. They're a bit more fluid than a Lego, and can form some pretty interesting shapes. The kids create buildings, vehicles, people, and anything else they can come up with out of them. You can also wear them on your head, as Graham discovered. Needless to say, as yet another building toy, the kids love them.

Cleaning as Fun

Jennifer Hammons, Site Supervisor

Sometimes it doesn't matter what we offer, the kids are just not interested. They'd rather help with chores. Even if they're enjoying a new craft, or coloring with their friends, the minute the brooms and rags come out, they want to help. Lately, with the leaves getting blown into the foyer from the strong wind tunnel of the doorway, we have lots for the little ones to do. Every evening before close, we pick a new volunteer to help sweep up the leaves. They love it! And we appreciate all of their help.
